The Zuma Affair, Labour and the Future of Democracy in South Africa

CAROLYN BASSETT & MARLEA CLARKE

ABSTRACT  South Africa’s new democracy has been tested by the controversy over the candidacy of Jacob Zuma, who became the successor to President Thabo Mbeki as leader of the African National Congress in December 2007, and is poised to become the country’s new president after the 2009 elections. Few social actors had more at stake than organised labour, which found itself sidelined from the leadership contest, while political allies under Mbeki. Labour supported Zuma throughout the leadership campaign, and can been seen as having ‘won’ in the leadership contest. Yet the labour movement has avoided the critical question: at what cost? We argue that labour’s strategy of
